The Strife

By PETER CLARK MACFARLANE.

(Copyright, 1910, by the Pearson Publishing Co.)

By this time the hall was packed from corner to corner with a seething mass of men, and Martin had deliberately climbed onto the platform and stood by the table in the center of it, with his old, defiant attitude, listening to the shouts and cries, and yet gradually calming them by his own calmness. When, finally, something like quiet was restored, Martin spoke.

"Now, boys," he said, "I come here to tell you why I worked today."

Something in his tone, as well as the indefinable quality of his manner, impressed the men afresh. With the quickness and the vividness of a lightning flash there seemed to flow into the crowd consciousness a quaver of doubt, and then perhaps more, a glimmer of possibility that after all Martin might not be a traitor, and may have had some reason for working that was not discernible nor explicable in advance. Still this thought was no more than sufficient to poise their passion for a moment. Martin must come through with a satisfactory explanation if he would save himself. Why was he hesitating? Why, as he started finally to speak, did he turn and look once more at Bolan? For a moment there was silence yet more tense; and then Bolan, who, not prepared for this unlooked-for crisis, was filled with terrible perplexity, saw his course flash out before him like the track of a searchlight.

"It's all right, boys!" Bolan shouted. "Martin worked today under secret orders from me. He's probably saved the strike. There ain't many men that would have had the nerve to pull off what he did today, but he done it, and I'm proud of him."

"Why didn't you tell us that at the meeting this afternoon, Bolan?" shouted one recalcitrant. "What's the use of us getting all tore to pieces this way thinkin' Jack had quit?"

"We told you there wasn't nothin' to worry about," answered Bolan. "I reckon you got sense enough to know that we couldn't put out on the bulletin board what we was doin', haven't you?"

Bolan himself was doing some more rapid thinking. John Martin with supreme audacity had blocked his scheme for the destruction of the casting, and had forced Bolan into a position where he was forced to father Martin's seeming disloyalty in order to protect himself and the whole Union from the damaging effect of the story that Martin was prepared to tell in order to carry his point. It was clear that Martin held the whip hand. Bolan had already capitulated. It remained now only for him to march out of the works, and this he promptly did. Drawing a telegram from his pocket he held it up before them.

"Boys," he began, "I'm going to tell you in a little secret. I've been president of this local ever since it was born. This afternoon I was elected a vice-president of the International. John Martin's been regularly nominated and posted as a candidate for President of our local. To-night is your regular meeting night and your annual election. To-night I want to see you make John Martin your president by acclamation. Will you do it?"

The unhesitating and thunderous aye that resounded revealed to Bolan more clearly than anything else could how completely and how surprisingly in his own mind at least, he had been succeeded in the leadership of the Union by John Martin.

The evening meeting was over. Bolan had remained behind to turn over some papers to his successor in office. When this was accomplished the ex-president still lingered. An awkward silence ensued.

"Well!" exclaimed Martin, after some moments.

"You beat me to-day," said Bolan grudgingly, "but it's no sign you'll do it the next time."

"It's a sign I'll try good and hard," replied Martin with testy emphasis. Then he laid a half-smoked cigar upon the table, got up and walked around to where Bolan stood, and remarked incisively:

"I recognize, Bolan, that the fight between us goes on. I'm president of this local, but you're vice-president of the International. We stand for different things. I'm an idealist. You're an opportunist. We represent two classes of men. They're in our local. They're on our Executive Committee. They're in the International Council. The strife is on continually. But wherever there's a fight between principles and practices, progress is goin' to be made. I don't shed any tears over a scrap like you and me've had to-day, and I don't hold any grudge. It's a sign this Union is alive. It ain't a quarrel between men. It's a feud between ideals; and so long as I'm alive, the fight'll be as hard as I can make it. There's my hand on that proposition."

Bolan nodded assent to Martin's words in his emphatic way, then grasped the outstretched hand and shook it fiercely.

AMERICAN MANUFACTURES.

A preliminary statement of the thirtieth United States census shows a growth of 40 per cent in the value of the products of manufactures in the United States between 1904 and 1909. The total in the former year was $14,733,903,900 and in the latter $20,672,052,000. In producing this amount the value of the materials used rose from $5,500,208,000 to $12,141,291,000, an increase of 43 per cent. This cost of materials does not include unused materials and supplies bought for either speculation or subsequent use. The value added by manufacture formed 41 per cent of the total value in 1909, amounting to $8,530,761,000, representing the difference between the cost of the materials used and the value of the manufactured products. The miscellaneous expenses amounted to $1,945,676,000 in 1909 and to $1,453,168,000 in 1904. This includes rent, taxes and expenses not elsewhere classified.

The average number of wage-earners employed during 1904 and 1909 was 5,468,383 and 6,515,046 respectively, and their wages totaled $2,610,445,000 and $3,427,028,000 in the same year. The number of salaried officials and clerks was 218,556 in 1904 and 30,267 in 1909, and their salaries amounted to $574,439,000 and $938,575,000 respectively.

The total number of manufacturing establishments in the United States, exclusive of the hand and building trades, the neighborhood industries and those whose products were less than $500 per annum in value, except in the cases of factories just starting or idle during part of the year, was 258,491 in 1909, an increase of 52,211 over 1904. The capital invested rose from $12,675,581,000 in 1904 to $18,428,270,000 in 1909.—Census Bulletin.

SEVEN LAKES OIL DISTRICT

Latest News Tells of the Bringing in of a Hundred Barrel Well. A "Merchantable" Strike Reported from Gallup.

Letters from the Seven Lakes oil field in New Mexico, in which many Arizonians are interested state that the fifth well sunk in the district now shows oil in goodly quantity. Every well sunk has found oil in quantity worth while though the deepest well is only 500 feet and produces a hundred barrels a day.

The following telegram from Gallup, N. M., on the 29th is timely: "The first 'merchantable' strike of oil in the Seven Lakes field of western New Mexico was made Thursday by the New Mexico Oil and Refining company of Gallup, 200 yards from the original Talle well. The well is 400 feet deep, with a six-inch casing, there is 265 feet of oil in the hole and it will pump steadily from 30 to 35 barrels. This is considered by far the most important development in the Seven Lakes field since oil was first discovered there a few months ago. There is a strong possibility that this will be a genuine gusher after it is shot, as the grease now stands two-thirds of the way to the surface.

The directors of the company held a meeting in Gallup Thursday of this week and decided to go ahead and pump the oil and sell it to other companies for fuel to be used with the adjacent drilling outfits now at work. This is the first well in such shape that the oil may be immediately taken out and placed on the market. The strike has aroused considerable excitement and finally demonstrates that the Seven Lakes district has come to stay and will be a big producer of petroleum."

REPARTEE HOT OFF THE GRIDDLE

Mrs. Robert S. McKee, daughter of President Harrison, is a great believer in woman suffrage, and whenever she has the chance she steps right up to the bat and lines out a hot argument in support of her position. One day

"Usin' Tiz Gramma?"

"Yes, Harold. It Makes Grandma's Feet Feel Just Like Yours, Free From Tiredness, Aches and Corns!"

"Your papa and mamma, your grandpa and your grandma all use TIZ, Harold. And you'll use it too, when you get to be a man. Then your feet will never hurt, or get tired. That's why we all use TIZ."

Most of us get old, feet first. The bunions get stale, more wearisome and painful. Corns get harder and more stubborn as the feet become more tender. At a time when old people need their feet most, they can use them less—unless they use TIZ.

If you have never used TIZ before, your first use of it will bring back some of your girlhood days. TIZ will make your feet feel young, strong and vigorous. They'll never be tender, never chafe or ache, never get blistered or swollen, and your corns, bunions and callouses will be no more. Nothing will do it or can do it like TIZ. Don't experiment with other things; other people have done that for you and they are all now using TIZ.

TIZ acts on a new principle—draws out all the poisonous exudations that make foot troubles.

TIZ, 25 cents a box, sold everywhere, or sent direct, on receipt of price, by Walter Luther Dodge & Co., Chicago, Ill. Recommended by all Drug Stores, department and general stores.

she was having such a discussion with a prominent New York lawyer.

"Now, my dear Mrs. McKee," insisted the attorney, "it would be all right to have woman suffrage if the educated and brilliant women like you went to the polls. You and your kind know all about public questions and your votes would undoubtedly be of great good to the country. But you would not derive any benefit from having the ignorant and uneducated woman voting. Imagine the absurdity of your cook voting and attempting to solve the great issues of the day."

"Unfortunately," replied Mrs. McKee, with a tragic air, "he does!"
